WIMPFEN

During the Thirty Years' War, Wimpfen a town in BADEN, was the scene of a battle between the margrave of Baden and TILLY. The margrave was defeated with the loss of half his army and Tilly made off with his train of artillery and military chest.

The Knights of St. John pillaged the Mausoleum at Halicarnassus to build the Citadel of BUDRUM.

A specimen of this "Budrum Marble" was sent to the British Museum by Sir Stratford Canning (1846) and by Newton (1857)

King Louis XIV succeeded in getting the reins of control out of his mother's hands & into his own.

He also took over the services of the mighty minister Richelieu, the bishop of LUÇON. His policy was the policy of Henry II - to suppress factions, establish toleration.

strengthen the crown and make France
the first power in Europe. He set himself out to bring the domestic troubles of France under control. He did this with the energy of a born administrator.
